Prevention Tips

- Ensure that all formwork timber is removed after construction.
- Termites often attack formwork & use it as an avenue to enter houses.
- The edges of all concrete slabs should be clear of obstructions such as garden beds & woodchips. Australian Standards state that there should be an exposed slab edge of 75mm.
- All hot water services & air conditioning overflows should be diverted away from the sides of the house & water not allowed to accumulate around the perimeter of the dwelling. Moisture is a prime attractant for termites.
- Ensure that the storm water run off is connected.
